

Edward Baden Case Study: Queen Mary's College

Queen Mary's College is an incorporated, co-educational, sixth form college based in Basingstoke. The College had a requirement to relocate several of their departments to a newly constructed building on the other side of their campus.

Queen Mary's College chose Edward Baden to provide a relocation solution that was built around their bespoke requirements. The solution would enable the relocation of approximately 100 staff members and the equipment required to deliver teaching to 1200 students. Wrapping, packing, uplift, removal and unpacking of all these items would form key components of the solution that Edward Baden delivered.

As the departments being moved included Science, Physical Education, Geography, Psychology and History, the work required the relocation of sensitive items such as computer equipment and potentially hazardous chemicals. Edward Baden risk assessed the new environment and the nature of the items that needed to be relocated; and recommended an effective solution that included appropriate packaging and waste transfer notes.

In order to ensure that move would be delivered according to the required timescales, the Move Management team at Edward Baden put together a detailed project delivery plan that would allow for the items to be appropriately packaged, taking into account the time needed to build bespoke packaging. The items would also need to be moved and unpacked as quickly as possible so that the College could be fully functioning with little disruption to the services that they provide to their students.

Nigel Westcombe, Premises Coordinator at Queen Mary's College, said of Edward Baden's services that: 'I found all Edward Baden's staff to be professional, organised, courteous and helpful. The advice given by the Edward Baden management at the planning stage of the move was relevant, accurate and useful. The task was completed on time and in budget.'

Ian Pointer, Managing Director at Edward Baden, said that: 'Queen Mary's College has an outstanding reputation for excellence and we wanted to ensure that the relocation solution that we provided them delivered on every level. We took the time to assess their needs and advise them on the best means of relocating their teaching equipment. Our team then translated these requirements into a tight relocation project and we are glad that they were happy with the outcome.'
